I did not walk ^{with} the Club this year, gave notice not to take dinner with them. Arthur, walked and had dinner free provided by J. Floyd, in Army barracks.

A grand wedding was being solemnized at St Peter's Eaton Square, London, On each side of the strip of carpet that extended from the church door to the curb was a crowd of well-dressed people watching the guests arrive, In the wake of a procession of equipages of the aristocratic and well-appointed character came a four-wheeled cab dingy and disreputable beyond belief. "Here, here!" shouted the policeman in charge, "You can't stop here, We're waiting for the Bishop of -", The cabman regarded the officer with a triumphant leer as he climbed down from his seat, "It's all right, guv'nor," he said, "I've got the old buffer inside!"

In 1781 a young man named Thomas Meakin, from Rushton, lived as an apprentice with an apothecary in Stone, and became attached to his master's daughter. The father is said to have resented this and to have "slept him to death" (smothered him in his sleep). In any case, the young man died and was buried in St Michael's Churchyard. The entry in the church register says: = "Thomas Meakin, of Stone, was buried July 16th 1781". Up to that time no suspicion seems to have fallen upon the apothecary. But some months later the deceased's favourite pony pawed the grave up, and this fact, coupled with several other suspicious cases which the doctor had dealt with, created the impression in the neighbourhood that the youth was murdered by his master. At any rate, this was the view taken by Meakin's relations, who, hearing of the depredations made on the grave by the pony, went over to Stone and opened the coffin. A curious thing was found to have happened - the body had turned itself over and was lying face downwards. Thinking their son could not rest in his grave at Stone they conveyed the coffin to Rushton where it was reinterred, and where the grave may still be seen and noticed, for, contrary to the usual custom, it faces the east, since tradition states that if a body will not rest in its grave it must be turned round and the headstone made to face the other way.

A young man, clad in homespun, was standing near the National Gallery in London, when he was accosted by half-a-dozen genteelly-dressed ladies with; "Just arrive in town?" "Yes, and a great place it is" replied the countryman. "Is so," said another,
 "How is your mother?" They continued, bent on sport with the countryman
 "Oh, she's pretty well," he replied, "She's sent me on business," Ah! What kind of business?" continued the third, "Why, said the man, "She wanted me to look about for half-a-dozen of the biggest fools in London, and now I think I've found them." The next moment the countryman had the pavement to himself.

Burglary.

"Well, my dear," he said, as he was dressing, "I s'pose you were right when you told me last night that there were burglars in the house;" "Why?" "Because all the money that was in my pockets when I went to bed is gone." "Well, if you'd been brave and got up and shot the wretch you'd have had your money this morning." "Possibly - but then I should have been a widower." "She gave him back half his money."
